Joshua de Gastyne, BRI-Georgetown

makes the case against

Healthcare Protectionism

Greetings!

October 20, 2015

Following in the tradition of strong BRI student leadership, this academic year's cohort continues to amaze and gift us with their insight into what's going on in healthcare policy and medical delivery.

It's great to have them on our team as we work to increase awareness and broaden the dialogue at academic medical centers. As the effects of detrimental Obamacare policies become more obvious, BRI-affiliated medical students eagerly search for answers on their own, determined to find solutions so that both patients' and doctors' needs can be met.

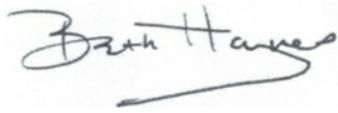

Why do we continue to hold healthcare somehow different from most products and services?

Joshua de Gastyne, BRI-Georgetown explores the excuses and reasons people from various areas give to keep up the barriers to transparency and choice in healthcare.

We always welcome perspectives from medical students, practicing physicians, and other healthcare professionals who are interested in promoting freedom principles in healthcare. Please let me know if you have something you'd like to submit for publication on our website.

What if you could actually talk to Dr. Benjamin Rush?

Dr. Craig Jurgensen, a retired physician, has perfected his hobby of enacting one of his -- and our -- heroes, Dr. Benjamin Rush.

Dr. Jurgensen was our surprise Saturday lunch Keynote speaker at the BRI-Leadership Conference 2015. We think you'll learn a lot about Dr. Rush from Dr. Jurgensen's creative performance.

MEMBERSHIPS AND DONATIONS FUND OUR WORK

We could not hold as many events as we do, reaching so many medical students as we do with BRI's commonsense economic and free enterprise healthcare solutions without your memberships and generous contributions.

Please help BRI continue its mission: Promote solutions that protect the doctor-patient relationship as the primary means of delivering quality medical care, empowered by a robust free enterprise system, which fosters innovation and reduces cost.
