Technology streamlines medical care delivery

~

More videos from Leadership Conference

Greetings!

Whether you have been a long time BRI newsletter reader or are newly finding out about us, we think you'll be inspired by the gift that keeps on giving--Direct Primary Care and free market healthcare options.

Luckily, BRI is not the only organization promoting these ideas. Michelle Lu of Saint Louis University is the latest conference attendee on a BRI scholarship to report on her takeaways from the AAPP Direct Primary Care conference--not only on DPC, but on medical technology overall.

Michelle knows about medical innovation, too. She was on a team of SLU med students who helped create an inspiring medical technology for patient care.

BRI's successful Intern Program needs you.

We are very proud of the great work done by our energetic and dedicated interns. From podcasts to pamphlets, informational flyers to chapter outreach, BRI interns are truly an indispensable asset.

Interns have allowed BRI to grow and reach more and more students in exciting new ways.

But we need your financial help to be able to continue to do all this awesome work! Please give as generously as you can.

Here's what our interns have accomplished so far!

Daniel Milyavsky, Stony Brook, produced BRI's first pamphlet in an upcoming series, Saving the Patient-Doctor Relationship: How electronic health records, bureaucracy, and endless regulations increasingly strain physicians' relationships with their patients, and how we can fix it.

Haran Sivakumar, Icahn, worked on BRI's soon to be released podcasts (stay "tuned!"), supported a healthcare policy event in California featuring Dr. Beth Haynes, and created the first in BRI's educational pamphlet series, The ABC's of Medicare.

With proper attribution, please link to these materials in your own outreach, download or print at will!

John Flo, St. Louis University, also worked on the upcoming podcasts, represented BRI at the ISFL conference and has been indispensable in a number of other important projects.

Please join BRI or donate today so that we can continue to involve more medical students during their "off" weeks in the important work of healthcare freedom!
